

Project Insights:-

1. Having great openers who are power hitters is a huge advantage in T20 cricket, as it allows the team to get off to a strong start and score runs quickly.
2. A strong middle order is also important, as this is where the bulk of the runs are typically scored in T20 matches. It's good to know that your team has a strong middle order.
3. Having a finisher who can come in towards the end of the innings and score quickly is also valuable, as this can help the team post a competitive total or chase down a target successfully.
4. All-rounders are always a valuable asset in cricket, as they can contribute with both bat and ball. This can be particularly important in T20 matches, where every player needs to be able to contribute in multiple ways.
5. Fast bowlers are often key to success in T20 cricket, as they can take wickets early on and put pressure on the opposition. If your team has a strong fast bowler, this could be a significant advantage.

6. Being able to score consistently on any ground is a valuable asset in T20 cricket, as different grounds can have different conditions that can affect batting performance.
7. This level of consistency suggests that your team has a strong understanding of the game and can adapt to different situations and conditions.
8. This level of consistency could also give your team a mental advantage over the opposition, as they will be confident that they can perform well regardless of the ground or conditions
9. Leg-spin bowling is a highly effective form of bowling in T20 cricket, as it can often catch the batsmen off guard and result in wickets. If your team's leg-spinning all-rounder is a skilled bowler, this could give your team a significant advantage
10. Team have high average run rate and strong defensive capabilities suggest that they are well-balanced and have a good chance of performing well in T20 matches
